

ADMIRALTY AND MARITIME

The firm's admiralty and maritime practice has grown in response to the needs of both insurance companies and institutional clients. Navigating through the sometimes arcane world of admiralty and maritime law can be a difficult task for companies and marine insurers alike. The firm has experience in a variety of admiralty and maritime matters on behalf of its clients, including coverage disputes, collision cases, representation of marinas with respect to property damage claims, issues arising under the Longshoreman and Harbor Worker's Compensation Act, as well as Jones Act cases involving seamen injured while working on ships. In light of the fact that so few firms have attorneys who are knowledgeable in admiralty and maritime practice, the firm is uniquely positioned to assist its clients in handling matters involving this unique area of the law.
